A CHILD'S FANCY.

The storm passed by, and the glad sun …
Brightly the breaking clouds emerge;
In the maple tree top a bluebird sang;
In the east a beautiful rainbow hung.

"O, mamma, look!" and my wee one …
"Oh, look, mamma! Is it made of flowers?
Or is it the ladder the angels use
When they carry up water to make the showers?"

Fire at Nanaimo.

Victoria, April 28.—A few minutes past 12 to-day, at Nanaimo, a fire alarm was sounded, as the Vancouver Coal Company's offices were discovered in fire. The fire engine was soon on the ground, but the supply of water was limited, and despite the efforts of the firemen and others, who worked vigorously, the building was totally destroyed. All the contents of the office, together with Mr. Bate's furniture, was saved. The fire originated from a spark of a passing locomotive, which fell on the roof. The manager's furniture was fully insured.

STATE DISPATCHES.

WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

News Notes from Spokane Falls.

Spokane Falls, April 27.—[Special.]—A woman of the town named Ruth Pierce committed suicide here yesterday morning, by taking strychnine. Coroner Waterhouse held an inquest to-day.

The Odd Fellows of this city and neighboring towns celebrated the sixty-fifth anniversary of the order with a street parade and ball yesterday.

The latest news from the mines is very encouraging, and renewed interest in the district is manifest. Large parties are organizing to go into the interior for the camp, and the excitement of last month again will be renewed. Large numbers of people are arriving by every train and the indications are that the spring immigration has commenced.

Hon. J. J. Brown has been appointed democratic congressional committeeman for the territory.

SPAIN.

HEAVY LOSS OF LIFE.

Madrid, April 28.—The loss of life yesterday at the railway disaster, near Cuidad, proves to have been much greater than at first reported. Thirty-[illegible] corpses so far have been recovered from the wreck on the river. Two soldiers are missing. It is believed that the weakening of the bridge, which led to the disaster, was the work of republicans.

ACCIDENTS.

STEAMER SUNK.

Burlington, Iowa, April 28.—The steamer Grand Pacific struck a rock in [illegible] and sunk in the bar below the bridge. She is valued at $25,000.

PERSONAL, POLITICAL AND GENERAL.

Canada has 8,805 miles of railway, about one-fourteenth of the mileage of the United States. Last year the earnings amounted to $33,287,000, which is a little more than one-fortieth of those in this country.

A Des Moines man publishes a card announcing that, as many citizens have failed to recognize his [illegible] citizen, he has concluded to offer his services to the voters for the office of [illegible]

The estate of Daniel Webster, in Marshfield, Mass., is advertised for sale. The house was burned a few years ago, and has been replaced by another, but the law office remains as it was when he used it.

The remains of the late Governor Alexander H. Stevens of Georgia, it is said, are to be removed by his relatives from Oakland cemetery, Atlanta, to the old family burying ground near Crawfordville, where his father and mother are buried.

The ring with which General Israel Putnam did woo his bride in 1767 is said to be now in the possession of the wife of Dr. G. M. Dinsmore of Omaha, Neb., to whom it was presented thirty-four years ago by the sister-in-law of the daughter of "Old Put." If the date is correct, Putnam was but 26 when he married.

The Rutland, Vt., Herald urges the friends of the president to withdraw him early enough to enable them to dictate the nomination of Mr. Edmunds. If the Grant men, it says, had gone over to Edmunds, as they do for the nomination was made, he, rather than Garfield, would have been nominated.

"There is something almost heroic," says the New York Times, "in the steady fashion in which the senate goes on with real and important business, while the house is apparently incapable of doing anything worth doing."

The Columbus (Ga.) A ROSEATE VIEW OF THE MINES.

Isaac D. Hunton, a merchant well known here, has written a letter to J. D. McKinnon of the Clarendon hotel from Eagle Peak, the summit of the Coeur d'Alene range on the Thompson trail, under date of April 20. An Oregonian reporter was permitted to make the following extracts from the letter:

I have been in nearly all the stampedes from Arizona to Frazer river, and have met several of my old friends on Pritchard creek that tell me this is the best mining camp they have ever seen. Some of these old timers are direct descendants of George Washington. You couldn't hire them to tell a lie, and when they assure me they have been [illegible] the pan washed out and over five pounds cleaned up from a three days run on some of the claims, and when I see the rich specimens of quartz they find here, I tell you I feel satisfied that I am in the richest mineral belt in America. This is a great field for prospectors. All through these mountains, from the Yankee fork to the British Columbia line, they have [illegible] of quartz leads, and I venture to predict that within eighteen months there will be [illegible] thousand stamps crushing ore between Missoula and Coeur d'Alene lake.

This is the best mining country ever opened up where prospecting could be done by rail. Considering what capitalists and miners have attended the development of all previous excitements, [illegible] this mountain [illegible]

I know nothing from personal knowledge of any other trail but this (the Thompson trail), but I know of parties leaving Eagle City and making Thompson's falls on foot in twelve hours. One of my pack trains made the trip this week from Thompson's to this place in one day's drive with eighty horses, averaging 200 pounds to the animal. Considering the high water, deep snow, high price of [illegible] and whisky and abundance of stud poker and other games, it is astonishing that we do not hear more discouraging accounts from parties who have exhausted their resources in the mines. One great drawback to the country is the size of the claims taken by the discoverers. Twenty acres is too much ground for a single individual to work and open up in good shape in one season. The "Sunset" district, organized by the miners at Murraysville in February, wisely cut [illegible] with previous locations made in the Coeur d'Alene mining district, restricted the size of claims located after the organization of the district, to ten acres.

The snow is very deep all over the country. I have tunneled through ten feet of it to get a place to pitch my tent. It will be several weeks before it will all go off. The weather is very mild and pleasant. Ice does not form at night even at this point. Two bucks and does with deer, elk and moose and the creeks are full of trout.

I am of the opinion that Murraysville will be the best city on the creek, and I propose to get there with my goods as soon as possible. Raven City is about five miles east and quite a number of good buildings have been put up at Butte, halfway between Raven and Murraysville. I did not see below Murraysville, but I am told that there is plenty of timber in the creek from the mouth of Pritchard creek to that place for mining purposes. There is a good deal of timber on the creek, but every stick of it will be required for building purposes and fuel. The prospects for rich ores are excellent, and I am confident of making money this season. To Sam, Ralph, I am [illegible] with the prospects [illegible] I came.

TILDEN'S STATE-RIGHTS ISSUE.

Chicago Tribune.

Certain democratic newspapers affect to regard the letter sent to the Iroquois banquet over Tilden's name as an oracular deliverance which should be accepted as the keynote of the democratic campaign next fall. The republicans will interpose no objections to this programme. The Tilden letter revived and defended the old Bourbon doctrine of state sovereignty. It was written in response to the sentiment, "The Federal Constitution." The writer maintained that the war waged for the preservation of the Union has worked great injury to the government. "I wish," he says, "to see [illegible] the work of the war, I trust [illegible] the government to its original character, are not yet accomplished. The original character of the government, according to democratic construction, was [illegible] among certain sovereign states [illegible] which any of the [illegible] parties might terminate at pleasure and walk out of the Union. It was under this construction that the southern states attempted to secede and set up a new confederacy of a similar character. The people of the north refused to assent to this democratic view of the "original character" of our government, and they waged a long and bloody war, involving the sacrifice of hundreds of thousands of lives and thousands of millions of dollars, to put down the democratic heresy of state sovereignty. At this late day the venerable Tilden, as the oracle of the democratic party, says that a new strife must be inaugurated to restore the "original character of the government," and that the first and vital step in the reform of our government must be a fundamental change in the [illegible] of its administration."

If the democrats want to follow his advice and to make the approaching presidential election on that issue, the republicans will welcome the struggle, and will the more heartily if the counsels of Samuel J. Tilden become the figure-head for the democratic movement.

The opinions of the American people for a firm national government did not end with the close of the democratic state sovereignty rebellion. It has grown stronger with every year of national life. The suggestion that our government is merely a loose confederation of independent states, a sort of copartnership for temporary expediency, is abhorrent to the progressive patriotism of our time, and the mere suggestion of the heresy of state sovereignty should be in the democratic side this year the more certain and overwhelming will be the defeat of that party.

The toast to which Mr. Tilden was asked to respond—"The Federal Constitution"—was calculated to revive the old-time theory of the government. The word federal is used by the democrats of to-day to typify the league of independent states and to disavow the idea of national sovereignty. Tilden himself is in such a condition of physical and mental decrepitude that he lives only in the past, and his feeble mind naturally reverts to the old order of things in the days of Pierce and Buchanan. He ignores the work of the war, which created a nation out of [illegible] parts. He revels in the original Bourbon theory of our government in utter disregard of the effect which a revival of that theory would have on the prospects of his party. He would arouse a new political antagonism to the spirit of nationalism. It is easy to understand how his infirmity of body and mind can sink [illegible] into the [illegible] of an obsolete policy, but it is strange that live and active men, whose chief interest in the election of this year is for the success of their party, should be willing to adopt his effete and impracticable utterances as a guide for their political campaign.

A Woman Gambler.

Eagle City (Idaho) Letter.

"What man has done man may do," has long been a favorite maxim of the moralists and the clergy, but it is reserved for the philosophy of the mining camp to demonstrate that "what man has done woman may do also." Amid the general din of the saloon, and rising above the general confusion, the click of glasses against bottles and the tinkling of ivory chips may be heard in the words, "Again high," "bar kings," "there two beans" and the like, uttered in a soft but penetrating voice, which attracts the attention of any one entering the room. Making my way to a corner of the room, and elbowing a path cautiously through a pack of men, I saw a remarkable sight. Before one of the ordinary poker tables sat a woman of no ordinary beauty. The traces of refinement had not yet been obliterated by coarse associations and reckless dissipation. She was dressed in a tight fitting gown, fitting about the bust like the waist of a riding habit, and adorned with a double row of staring gilt buttons. On her head was a jaunty jockey cap of blue, but the little visor shading a face whose delicate lineaments and marked individuality would in any other place have secured for its possessor immediate notice as a cultivated, intellectual power. Yet there she sat, dealing the cards with a graceful ease born evidently of long practice in similar scenes. Careless of the rough talk and ribald jokes of the men she took a gambler dealt the cards, raked in the chips, paid losses, rejected to the calls of the men and attended to business with a skill of the men and calmness which was simply devilish humor [illegible] It was a painful sight. I never saw, for the [illegible] there was a refinement of wickedness about the scene which robbed it of the vileness of the slums and invested that woman in the vortex of a mining camp gambling house of the horror which was simply satanical.

THE PRESIDENCY.

What is Thought at Washington of the Utica Convention.

WHERE SENATOR MILLER MADE A MISTAKE.

The Democracy Uniting to Attack Their Common Foe—Edmunds Charged with Feathering his Nest in Congress.

Washington, April 28.—[Special.]—Members of congress and politicians who have returned from their trips and attended the New York and Ohio state conventions last week, are considering the situation of the presidential outlook, and are able to guard [illegible] money on the result. During the coming week nearly all the delegates remaining will be chosen, so that Chicago republican convention, it is some days before it may be gathered the prospective probable outcome. At this stand, the conventions in New York and Ohio have merely increased the doubt they were expected to dispel. Those best informed here state that the New York convention was made up of four factions, divided about equally between Arthur, Blaine, Edmunds and a body called anti-Arthur, mostly of Senator Platt and Conkling. This latter faction did not want Blaine, but they hated Arthur more. Senator Warner Miller united his forces with the last named, they being the great body of politicians whom Arthur neglected to appoint to office. This movement compelled the Arthur delegates to unite with those who employed Edmunds, and the result showed that the Edmunds-Arthur coalition had about ten more votes than the combined Blaine and anti-Arthur factions. Hence it controlled the organization of the convention, destroyed Senator Miller's slate and elected Edmunds delegates to Chicago. In order to save themselves from utter defeat, therefore, the president's friends gave all their delegates to Edmunds, and it is the general opinion that the convention was a drawn battle. At the outside, it is stated here, Blaine had not over 20 votes in the convention. The failure to make these gains is attributed to Senator Warner Miller's bungling, who, as a political boss for Blaine has proved a lamentable failure.

SENATOR MILLER'S MISTAKE.

James Wadsworth, member of congress from New York, who presided over the state convention, returned here yesterday. He says none of the delegates-at-large will vote for Arthur, unless they break their pledged faith. He regards the result rather more of a defeat for Blaine than a victory for Edmunds, and does not deny the responsibility for it. He says Miller's failure was entirely due to his hesitancy in accepting overtures from Edmunds delegates. The Edmunds men, in their conference almost unanimously decided, first, not to unite with the Arthur men, and, second, to unite with Miller's followers. They conferred with Miller, offering to him their desire for an alliance, and suggesting that as a basis for such alliance Miller should give to Edmunds two of the four delegates-at-large. Miller stated that he wanted to have a Blaine delegation. He told the Edmunds men that their strength entitled them to only one delegate at large. The Edmunds men insisted on two. Miller stood out against this demand a long time, and nearly all night. Towards morning, while Miller had just brought himself to yield, the Edmunds men had, by then [illegible] the Arthur men [illegible] Edmunds secured four delegates at large, in addition to [illegible] delegates in the convention. The Edmunds men [illegible] Miller to his fate, and [illegible] to the Arthur [illegible]

BLAINE'S WOUNDED BEAUTY.

It is probably the true story of the convention. There is no doubt that the result has given the Blaine men a set back, and they do not doubt it has thrown out of its ability to get the nomination, for his ability to carry New York state, which, the convention, was expected to show, is doubtful, and will have its effect on all parts of the country.

The most reliable statisticians figure out the New York delegation, which is now elected, as follows: Blaine 28, Arthur 28, Edmunds [illegible], and Arthur 4.

The outcome in Ohio is much the same. Of the total delegates at large three are for Sherman, and one for Blaine. District delegates stand in about the same ratio, and the delegates will probably vote for Sherman at Chicago a few times, and afterward split up. Some of the Ohio men say that in the present situation will go to the Blaine [illegible] two-thirds of the delegates.

All the delegates elected from Virginia by Senator Mahone are pledged, body and breeches, to him, and every one will vote for Arthur till he dictates.

Of the whole the week has been a disheartening week for [illegible] not believed among any representation that the [illegible] has been improved.

Blaine so far has not himself the chief [illegible] to look up from the second volume of his book and say, people of New York, "I am not a candidate," and have [illegible] a finger toward my nomination. I have [illegible] did anything in Maine, or anywhere else, to that end. I am busy on my book, but should any delegate succeed in capturing a single district delegate, or Maine, I would absolutely forbid the use of my name in the Chicago convention."

THE DEMOCRATIC SIDE.

On the democratic side there has been little or no talk, or doing, the past week. There is a returning cordiality between the Randall and the Morrison members of the house, and it is said the two leaders have come to rather a friendly way lately. As soon as the tariff bill is out of the way, the heartburnings that its passage or defeat will engender will wear off, and as soon as the hatchet will be buried and the factions may stop fighting among themselves and turn on their republican enemies. Randall said two days ago that he had drawn his head into his shell, and proposed to stay there till after the tariff bill was disposed of. He smiled grimly when addressed upon the presidential prospects, but does not regard such talk with displeasure. When asked about presidential matters, the democratic members generally advise the inquirer to wait until the republican nominations are made.

A southern democratic senator said, some days ago, that the nomination of Blaine would force his party to nominate Bayard or Flower, either one of whom could carry New York.

Political Points.

THE "TIMES" FOR BOSS.

Philadelphia, April 28.—The Press, not hitherto an active supporter of Blaine, to-day takes up the cudgels in to-day's leader against Phelps and other self-constituted champions of Blaine, and declares that he needs no defense, and that he is being injured by indiscreet defenders. The Press says: "Blaine, like Henry Clay in the halcyon days of the whig party, is a most striking mark for the shafts of jealousy and mean ambition, and has been more violently assailed than any other leading republican. For fifteen years the republican administration of the country has been against him, and is more violent that he has so successfully defied his assailants, and holds the enthusiastic devotion of the great mass of the republican people of the nation. It nominated for president, Blaine will not be in danger of defeat because of personal scandals. From them he needs no defense."

BLAINE'S STRENGTH.

New York, April 28.—[Special.]—The Tribune publishes a table showing what it calls Blaine's increasing strength. The writer shows by figures that Blaine already has 368 votes, or only 53 short of a majority, and several states still to be heard from. A remarkable feature of this showing is Blaine's strength in the so-called "doubtful" states in the last twelve years, as follows: Delegates from New York in 1876, none; 1880, 17; 1884, 28; New Jersey, 1876, 13; 1880, 16; 1884, 14; Pennsylvania, 1876, none; 1880, 23; 1884, 47; Ohio, 1876, none; 1880, 9; 1884, 21; Connecticut, 1876, none; 1880, 2; 1884, none; total, 1876, 13; 1880, 67; 1884, 141. Naturally enough, their gains in Pennsylvania are indicated by the [illegible] for Blaine, but cannot gain in other [illegible] fails to reckon with [illegible] as well as the Tribune.

THE "SUN'S" VIEWS.

New York, April 28.—[Special.]—The Sun, in a leading editorial, says: "Blaine's popularity has grown in his retirement until, as now the most popular individual in the whole republican party. It is not a popularity of politicians, for the politicians are mainly against him. It is the popularity of the press, for few of the powerful journals are champions of Blaine. It is the popularity of the masses, and this fact is the most hopeful omen in his favor. He is not the choice of the [illegible] but the surprising success which he has met with in Ohio and Pennsylvania are well calculated to confirm the determination and cheer the courage of his devoted followers."

A COUPLE OF ANOTHER SORT OF ECONOMICS.

New York, April 28.—[Special.]—The Tribune charges, in the [illegible] to-day, that the Evening Post has double-headed, that the Evening Post has [illegible] a charge of attack on Senator Edmunds [illegible] in that [illegible] the charge in the case of Senator Edmunds and restore to his [illegible] in connection with the [illegible] of the Burlington and Missouri railroad, through which the Post [illegible] his [illegible] the Post [illegible] now [illegible] the [illegible] at the time. "With it is not true that Blaine had any control on [illegible] the Little Rock and [illegible] railroad [illegible] it is true," says the Tribune, "that Edmunds and Evarts acquired their [illegible] in the Burlington road lands while they were in the senate, and the bill to restore the lands granted to their road was passed on the same day with the Little Rock bill, without a dissenting vote in the house or senate, and that Edmunds owned those lands when he thus voted to restore the land grant to his road."

THE LOUISIANA ELECTION.

New Orleans, April 28.—[Special.]—Figures so far procured make McEnery's vote in the state large. McEnery's majority is 40,000 for Stevenson. New Orleans is set down as furnishing 20,000 for McEnery and about [illegible] for Stevenson. Authenticated reports come in from a dozen parishes of most outrageous bulldozing and counting out. At polls at which Stevenson got nearly 500 votes, not he is not credited with receiving any.

Cincinnati Commercial Gazette.

No man in the United States has a claim for the presidency upon the republican party. The party is of more consequence than any man in it. The selection, therefore, should be based, not upon sentiment, but upon a superior fitness, and ability; upon a high sense of the duties due to the public; upon a clear record as to jobs and monopolies of all kinds. With such a candidate upon a right platform such as will be adopted, the republican ticket will succeed.

The Genuine and the Fraud.

Every good thing has its host of imitators who ape the virtues of the genuine, and never hesitate to place the imitation before the public in the most alluring manner.

Never has this been better illustrated than by all the so-called porous plasters; every one of them are imitations of "Allcock's Porous Plaster," and, of course, they all claim to be "just as good" or to contain "superior ingredients."

Do not be deceived by these false statements. Always ask for and insist on having Allcock's Porous Plasters.

ENGLISH HORSE-BREEDING.

Use of Arabian Sires on the Large Farms of Modern England.

Land and Water.

There are many persons at the present day interested in the welfare of the thoroughbred who assert that he has deteriorated, and the assertion is by no means new; it was made early in this century after the effects of increased size on the powers and constitution of the race horse began to make themselves known. They adamantly base their argument on the fact that out of the enormous number of thoroughbreds annually produced so many turn out useless, and unsound, and of those who do stand training so few can stay. A combination of lightness and stamina and the ability to transmit those qualities to the offspring has always been the test of purity of blood. It is said our thoroughbreds cannot [illegible] his feet, that, except a genuine and honest, his sires are frequently unfit, so that the unsoundness and want of constitution can only be remedied by fresh infusions of Arab blood.

Experiments have been tried in this direction, but have in most instances failed, owing to the deficiency of size [illegible] speed.

If our horses are accused of being wanting in symmetry in [illegible] proportion. It is asked how many race horses must be visited before one capable with a Barb [illegible] a [illegible] or a [illegible] are we not [illegible] a search for more likely suitable upon a Marbeuf?

The question then is, Whence is the regenerating stud to be derived? W. S. Blunt, of Crabbet Park, Three Bridges, Sussex, has taken the work to the city. Mr. Blunt, accompanied by Lady Ann Blunt, whose taste is excellent judge, has been to Arabia. He purchased some pure Arab horses. Acquainted with the language, manners and customs of the Arabs, an acquaintance with some of their sheiks, he has had opportunities which have been afforded to few Englishmen, and has been able to persuade them to part with some of their best animals. Mr. Blunt has at Crabbet eighteen brood mares and a stallion, most of them came from northern Arabia, and belonged to the Anazeh tribe of Arabs, who possess the finest animals of the breed, and the most likely from their superior size and length to get race horses. The Anazeh have possessed the best horses in Arabia from time immemorial. They are nomads, and lead the life of the Arabian horse; whenever he finds a life way into some town stud, he, like his master, deteriorates. The excellence of the Arab horse has been maintained by repeated selection, and it may not be generally known that the first selection of five Arabian mares, called Kehileh, was made by Ishmael of Salameh, a descendant of Ishmael, about 1900 B. C. Records before David, king of Judah, so that an authentic pedigree is known to have been preserved by the Arabs for 3800 years.

Mr. Blunt's stallion, called Kars, is a bay horse fourteen hands three inches in height, foaled in 1874, of the family called Seglawi Jedran. He is a beautiful horse, and is kept in good, hard working condition. In winter he carries Mr. Blunt, who is by no means a feather weight, to hounds. His comparison presents a great [illegible] of our pure bred [illegible] stallions, which [illegible] their owners, and are so lacking in [illegible] that they can barely [illegible] themselves much less any one on their backs. Most of Mr. Blunt's mares range between fourteen and two to fifteen hands, and they possess every point that could be wished for in a Turf horse. The main difficulty Mr. Blunt has to contend with is in getting a rival to our race horse in point of size. It does not admit a deficiency in speed, he says, is inherent in the Arabian horse. Make him as high as our race horse, and his speed will not be inferior, but it would be strange if the quest [illegible] selection and cultivation have not [illegible] superior of our horse. He thinks he may, Mr. Blunt is steadily mastering the other difficulty, want of size. Good keep will do wonders, fostering has already done wonders. He has now at Crabbet a chestnut filly, two years old, by Kars, Hagar, no [illegible] already close on fifteen hands. Her sire is 14.3, her dam just about 15 hands; so if she makes 15.1, which she will do at the least, Mr. Blunt will have gained an inch in one generation. This is wonderful, and goes far to show how worthless shall the majority of the imported horses of the last century were. Few of them were Arabs; most of them, stunted ponies, lacking the power to expand in nourishment. The Arab horse, No wonder increase in light was in those days great. Mr. Blunt thinks that the pure Arabian can be bred with fear of losing those qualities inherent in his nature, such as indomitable courage, a generous disposition, a good constitution, soundness of wind and limb, and that superior density of bone, muscle and tendon which marks his race. And he thinks that if our race had been bred entirely from pure stock there would be no fault to find with one. It is to be hoped Mr. Blunt may be resolutely carried out as certainly a patriotic one. If he produces next to foreign a race of pure bred Arabs will be well established at Newmarket race course will that have any [illegible] of inspecting some of Mr. Blunt's productions, and judging for themselves whether they will not make a good [illegible] of the [illegible] as the plate of to-day, while at the same time they are serving [illegible] useful purposes.

EIGHTY SKY-BLUE LEGS.

The Vision on Which the President Gazed Enamored.

Washington Correspondent.

President Arthur came out of the front door of the White House this afternoon just before 3 o'clock. He was accompanied by Secretary Chandler. A raised platform made an easy incline to the front of the support of the outside pillars of the portico, where the president and secretary of the navy took a position to review the colored hosts celebrating the signing of the emancipation proclamation. The president was in black broadcloth, a closely buttoned frock, a red carnation the one spot of color in his sable dress, and a new, wide brimmed spring silk hat shaded his dark eyes. No one who noticed him could help commenting upon his improved appearance. Last spring he was weary and worn out. Now he appears to have fully regained his health, and he looks very much as he did when he first went to Long Branch after Garfield's death.

Of the 5,000 negroes in the District, the great majority was in the procession or on the streets as spectators. The bright day and warm sun made them happy. In the crowds wretched poverty flaunted itself as gayly as the richest of the colored aristocracy. The societies with their military bands strutted past the president with such an air of reckless gayety that he could hardly restrain a smile. As the colored men reverently uncovered from time to time the president gracefully lifted his hat in return, Secretary Chandler did not bow, but stood with his hands in his pockets, with his derby cocked over his right ear watching the passers.

The climax of the procession came when the chariot of Love and Beauty loomed in sight, preceded by a blaze of horns and followed by a crowd of stalwart young fellows who gazed upon the chariot freighted with so much dusky beauty. The inside of the chariot was an express wagon. In each corner of the wagon was a pole supporting one corner of a snow white canopy. Inside of the wagon seats were built up nearly ten feet in height in the shape of a pyramid. Upon the apex of the pyramid, in a half reclining position, was the Queen of Beauty, wearing a yellow tinsel crown. Banged about her were forty maiden members of the court dressed in cloth white dresses and sky blue stockings. As the eighty limbs in the sky-blue legs of the court beauties became the prominent feature of the display. As the eighty sky-blue legs moved slowly by, the queen cast a glance toward the dusky queen, [illegible] her bosom, gracefully kissed her hand to him. It was involuntarily toward the ruler of the White House. Without a smile the president gravely lifted his hat, but the secretary of the navy was not under such good control. He nearly laughed outright, and it was only with great effort that he restrained himself.

Blaine's False Pretenses.

Chicago Herald.

It will occur to most people that Mr. Blaine is carrying his pretense of modesty a little too far. Although his agents are at work as zealously as ever in every state in the Union he has the temerity to declare to an interviewer not only that he is not a candidate but that he is in favor of the nomination of General Sherman. If such a proposition is sincerely made, and it is made in that it cannot [illegible] or decent [illegible] ... it will be because the intelligent voters of the country have a lot of self-respect and of regard for [illegible] There are many men in America who would like to be president, but there is only one prominent political leader whose ambition in that direction amounts to a senile mania. He is the man who, while moving heaven and earth in his own interest, has the audacity to pretend that he is in favor of the nomination of General Sherman.

They Want the Revenue.

New York Times.

The sensitive "pocket nerves" of the heavy taxpayers in Des Moines have been severely shocked by the enforcement of a prohibitory law that deprives the city of $20,000 a year, this sum having heretofore been paid by saloons for licenses. Therefore they are urging the city council to enable the saloon keeper to evade the law and to collect a license fee in the form of a monthly fine. This is the plan adopted in some of the cities of Kansas, where prohibition has been placed in the constitution as well as in the statutes. In February last there were 140 saloons open in the city of Leavenworth, each of which paid a "fine" of $10 a month. It is one thing to enact a prohibitory law and another to enforce it. If the heavy taxpayers of the capital of Iowa have so little respect for a law of their own making they openly ask their councilmen to assist in evading it, their prohibitory law must be sustained by an exposure of corruption in their city government.

Old Maverick.

New York Sun.

The richest man in Texas at the time of his death was "Old Maverick" of San Antonio, who came to that country in 1837 with nothing but a brindle cow and a dog. He was direct from Ireland, and, landing at Galveston, came up the country and settled near San Antonio. He was a thrifty old fellow, and claimed every cow that he found running loose without a brand. During the war when most of the men folks went into the army and the women folks had all that they could do to watch the sky and keep the weeds out of the garden patch, little attention was paid to the cattle, and Maverick kept himself busy placing his brand upon every stray "critter" he could find. He died a few years since, the richest banker in Texas and the largest real estate owner in San Antonio, leaving his large family of children more than $1,000,000 apiece. Even now, not only in Texas, but in Wyoming and faroff Oregon, at the spring round-up, when a steer or cow is found without a brand, it is called a Maverick, as a testimonial to the old man's thrift.

"ON THE YELLOWSTONE."

Romance of the Young Woman Befriended by Salmi Morse, Drama of an Early Nevada Courtship.

Kansas City Star.

Six or seven years ago Judge Blackburn was one of the leading jurists of Nevada. His daughter Mary, then not quite 17 years old, was a lovely girl, tall, slim, and with a glorious head of hair, possessed of that peculiar shade which one sees only in the [illegible] of the lightest brown. They were at that time at Silver City, Nev., and she was besieged with admirers, whom the judge endeavored, with a [illegible] sort of parental solicitude, to keep at arm's length. Probably the most obnoxious of all the suitors was Harry J. Norton, a bright young newspaper man, who was publishing a typical mining camp journal there. Norton was a romantic looking fellow, dark haired and handsome, and had a history full of adventures. He had been a soldier, had fought his way into Mexico, lost his head [illegible] Mexican government employ, had thrilled the inhabitants of the Yellowstone to the most marvelous fairy stories [illegible] he was the sole survivor of a wagon train of the Apaches on the Gila river, had escaped by strategy and desperate courage alone, and [illegible] a good many other [illegible] adventures of which [illegible] and picturesque tales, and [illegible] by flood and field were [illegible] into his conversation and reflected as his [illegible] He was a man of iron steel nerve, with power and a dominant force of character, and it is not at all strange that he soon captured the belle of the camp.

Judge Blackburn, however, regarded him with unconcealed suspicion. He made it [illegible] that he considered him a hard-working and [illegible] man, and refused to trust the future happiness of his child in his hands. Norton courted her quietly and persistently, and was not the man to be baffled. Next to himself the most persistent suitor was a rich Mexican, who had drifted north and whose reputation was spotless. He was a very rich, rather dashing, and a ready hand at [illegible] anywhere. Norton fatally, that he was stabbed in the way and prejudicing the judge against him and for [illegible] his own in finding a pretext for a quarrel and the [illegible] Norton's fate. The challenge was instantly accepted, the Mexican, as the challenged party, chose pistols at ten paces at twelve paces, and socially fixed next morning as the time.

In making the arrangements that night, Mr. Norton and his second were advised to [illegible] and quietly out of [illegible] in the [illegible] ... The last [illegible] ... said [illegible] was dying, to a bend on the [illegible] Mexican's [illegible] had [illegible] over his head. In the early gray dawn, the [illegible] and [illegible] Mary [illegible] what had happened also that he must leave [illegible]

"I will go with you," she said.

So [illegible] and the [illegible] Norton procured [illegible] the [illegible] ... she was married, and, taking her alone with the prowess of the [illegible] carried from the [illegible] and of Nevada [illegible] Judge Blackburn did not have much difficulty in arriving at an understanding of the case. He was a stern old man, and started in pursuit fully determined to [illegible] ... Norton [illegible] whom he [illegible] ... Judge [illegible] had escaped the girl away at [illegible] the [illegible] self-conceit of men, and [illegible] both to [illegible]

Norton, however, had a [illegible] not [illegible] They struck [illegible] and took passage [illegible] arrived on a [illegible] at Virginia City. The [illegible] rather [illegible] that they were unable to [illegible] the stage, and securing horses, finished the journey in the saddle. They arrived in Virginia City, a half an hour ahead of what [illegible] He was [illegible] a marriage certificate. As [illegible] could not [illegible] any [illegible] never entirely forgave Norton and returned to his home feeling that he had been deeply wronged. Nobody was permanently affected by the death of the Mexican, and the prosecution quietly died out for lack of interest.

For two years the young couple led a roving life, drifting wherever the shifting fortunes of nomadic western journalism drew the husband. For a time they were in the Black Hills, but some "gold brick" confidence men, whom Norton exposed, enlisted their influence to freeze him out. His next objective point was Leadville, and, reluctant to take his girl wife to so turbulent a camp, Norton sent her home to her parents in Nevada and went to fight the battle alone. He was soon a popular character there and became editor of the Chronicle, which had recently been started.

While at Leadville Norton published a book, half romance and half history, entitled "On the Yellowstone." It was the idealized story of his adventures, and while it never reaped the author a fortune its sale was wide. In 1879 hard work and a reckless life broke Norton down and he was seized with pneumonia. His wife was telegraphed for and came in on the big, lumbering stage on the evening he died. They took her to the tent of cabin in which he lay, and the scene at the bedside was pitiful beyond all words. In the delirium of grief she clung to the corpse, and had to be finally taken away by sheer force. Norton was buried under the piñon trees in the Carbonate hills, and the widow of less than 20 went back to Nevada, carrying with her the dead Bohemian's few effects, including the manuscript of a revision of his book, "On the Yellowstone," making more of a story and less of a history of it. A purse was raised for her among her husband's old associates, and she was lost out of sight. It was afterward learned that she went with her father to the Pacific coast, and a few years ago became suddenly enriched by a legacy left her by a relative. It was with this money that she made her theatrical venture in New York, again opposing the wishes of her parents and against without warning leaving his house. Salmi Morse's play, "On the Yellowstone," was in reality a dramatization of Harry Norton's book.

Principle in Politics.

Boston Transcript.

It is not a very long time since George W. Curtis was shouted for as a spectacle [illegible] at [illegible] the [illegible] of the phrases, the "men with brains," "the [illegible] ... with [illegible] nominated [illegible] and ran conventions. But we venture to say that Mr. Blaine would dispense with him the profits of the first edition of his new history if he would only speak a dozen words in his behalf at the Chicago convention. So much for being steadfast to principle at the risk of a [illegible] unpopularity, and retaining an unsullied reputation. Where is Conkling now with his [illegible] days of the man whose public career has been so elevating a force in politics? Absolutely stranded, so far as ever a political [illegible] ... the election of Mr. Curtis as a delegate to the Chicago convention is hailed with satisfaction throughout the country. Here's a lesson for young politicians to ponder.

Had Heard of It.

Wall Street News.

"I feel it my duty to inform you," he began, as he met a bank president on the street, "that your cashier is [illegible] that is, he gambles. Yes, sir, he frequents faro rooms, sir."

"Just heard all about it half an hour ago."

"Y-you did?"

"Yes, sir. Cashier came in and informed me that he was flayed and broke a faro bank last night. He [illegible] out his stock ticker, took a vacation for four weeks and will hereafter confine his attentions to draw poker. Come in and see us when you want a shave!"

History Repeated.

Portland, Me., Advertiser.

All signs indicate that the history of the last two conventions will be repeated. Mr. Blaine will lead on the first ballot, and perhaps have a greater lead than before, but he will lack a majority, which on subsequent ballots he will be unable to obtain. His utmost strength will be put forth in the first rush and afterward he will begin to fall. He may be able to dictate the nomination but not to get it.

It affords me pleasure to assure you that after using Dr. C. McLane's Celebrated Liver Pills for more than twenty years in my family, that I regard them as being superior to any I have ever used in my practice. I have not had them constantly and I did try others, and I have tried a good variety, but I have never had any to act so promptly, pleasantly and nicely as McLane's. I have used them on myself, wife and children, with the most gratifying results.

For children, having used them on my own with such ease and happy effect, I would recommend them to one and all. These pills do the work—do it promptly, do it well, and leave no ill effects behind.

As a bile remover, as a liver corrector, as a forerunner preparing the system for quinine, there is no pill or medicine equal to Dr. C. McLane's Celebrated Liver Pills. I expect to use them as long as I live, if they continue as good as they have been in the past.

Yours truly,
R. H. GILES,

TUESDAY MORNING APRIL 29, 1884

THE WHIRL OF POLITICS

There is a tangled skein of politics in our eastern states, and especially in New York. It is extremely difficult to form an idea of the causes which have so confused the republican situation in the empire state, yet explanation is possible, and a look below the surface discovers some of the more potent causes in the little aims and petty jealousies of some of those who pose as our greatest men. The Conkling faction in New York has actually been at work recently in combination with the Blaine people as a means of beating Arthur, and an Arthur-Edmunds combination supported by the enemies of the old stalwart ring of which Arthur was a lieutenant, has beaten the Blaine party in the state, and carried off the delegates at large for the Chicago convention. The whirl of politics brings about strange results.

Arthur is entirely out of favor with his old friends of the Grant-Conkling faction. They hate him intensely, and are making every exertion to cause his undoing, willing even to support their old enemy Blaine as a means to that end—not perhaps that they hate Blaine less, but Arthur more. The old stalwart ring, led by Conkling, expected to control the Arthur administration. It believed that as it had made Arthur, it had a right to assert its authority over him. But he found his responsibility as president too large to permit this surrender, and when the stalwart managers came to understand this their friendship for Arthur was turned to hatred and rage. At an interview between Arthur and Conkling at which Grant was present, Conkling demanded the removal of Robertson, the collector of New York whom Garfield had appointed, and sundry other things in the same line. Arthur replied that he had given his relations to the country and to his party very full consideration, and that he could not do it. He said moreover that he had not wanted to be president, that the office had come to him sorely against his wish, and that he realized the difficulty of his position, but he wished to give the country an administration that would be creditable to it, to his party and to himself, and hoped he would not plunge his party into difficulties as some of his predecessors had done. This last was an innocent remark intended to refer especially to Andrew Johnson. For the moment Arthur had forgotten that Grant was present, and that he could take the remark to himself. This interview completed the estrangement of the Conkling faction from the Arthur administration. What has followed has been the natural sequel of it.

Among the most violent opponents of Arthur is the New York Times. That paper was for Grant in 1880, but it preserves its consistency by not supporting Blaine now. It is against Arthur and Blaine both. Its own standing as the leading republican journal is more or less involved in the struggle, for should Arthur or Blaine be nominated the Tribune would be advanced in dignity and power. The great papers of the country are actuated by intense rivalry; they bear, like the Turk, no brother near the throne. The present game of the factions in New York is to checkmate each other, to cancel or nullify each other's power at Chicago, and the surprising combinations witnessed in the New York convention last week were the result of the necessity that fell upon each wing of the party to do something upon sudden emergency, to prevent the other wing from gaining a positive advantage.

These are not high notions of political action. But the game of politics does not vary essentially in different places. It is inevitably the same in the great state of New York as in a county of Oregon or a ward of Portland. At the feast of politics, which more often than otherwise turns out to be a Barmecide feast, multitudes scramble to be first; they tumble over and trample upon each other; they shift positions, combining to-day with those whom they fought yesterday, and ready to-morrow to form alliance with those whom they combat to-day. It is a spectacle of small motives, petty aims, mercenary purposes and mean revenges, even on the part of many who are ambitious to be regarded as the country's greatest men.

SCHOOL BOOK JOBBERY

In nearly all our states the presence of school book rings has long been recognized as one of the most unpleasant features of the common school system. The latest development of this abuse is presented in the alleged formation of a ring of eastern school book publishers by which competition in the business shall cease and "exchanges" and introduction rates will be done away with. If this plan succeeds the old books left in the hands of the public after any change of text books will be so much waste paper. The pool is said to require further that the publisher whose books are to be introduced shall pay three years' profits to the publisher whose books are to be excluded. If the coming monopolist is not willing to pay this severe penalty to the outgoing monopolist the change cannot be made. The selling price on each book is also asserted to be fixed at four times its first cost. The prospect afforded for a monopoly of one of the necessities of the common school system has naturally aroused a revolt, and there is already a movement to counteract it by general measures. One proposition is that each state shall appoint a school book commission, composed of the presidents of its colleges, to select the best books, acquire the copyright and make their manufacture free. Another proposition, embodied in a bill over which there was a lively fight in the Ohio legislature, proposes a commission of fourteen "practical educators," who shall consider bids for the furnishing of school books and select the cheapest and best, which shall be the standard text book for ten years thereafter. Other plans are proposed, but these embody the leading reforms. There is no doubt that legislation should be adopted in each state to prevent, first, extortionate profits on the school books used in the public schools, and second, the frequent changes which have heretofore been the scandal of our school system. A measure which should in addition provide for the uniform use of the best books all over the state would also be advantageous. But there is an obvious necessity for legislation to abate the notorious abuses of the school book system.

Most if not all astronomers have supposed the moon to be a dead planet, that it had so cooled down that all its waters had disappeared beneath the surface to rise no more, and that the surface had become a cold dreary waste of barren rocks to change no more. But within the last month we are told vast changes are taking place in our satellite. The mountain known as Tycho Brahe has become, it is believed, an active volcano. The rim of this crater is estimated to be 20,000 feet high and is 50 miles in diameter. A peak standing in this crater a mile high has suddenly grown into a gigantic mountain, nearly filling the entire basin of the crater, and towering above every other mountain on the moon. It is estimated now to be thrice as high as it was. Astronomers are giving a great deal of attention to the phenomena.

Indiana makes a very marked distinction in placing a value on the services of her male and female school teachers. Of her nearly 7000 teachers last year, over 6000 were women, and yet they were paid an average of only $35 80 per month, while the men received an average of $57 40. A state that devotes $1,000,000 a year to the cause of education ought to be above such an unjust and arbitrary distinction on account of sex.

Henry George boasts that he never "failed to convince" the audiences which gathered to hear him in England. Any number of orators, who are themselves personified to the judge, will testify that they never failed to charm all who heard them.

MODERN ANGLO MANIA

Nearly thirty years ago Thackeray, the novelist, paid a visit to New York, where he became the guest of Sir Edward Cunard, the well known steamship man. Of course the peculiarities of the guest humorist were closely scanned by Americans, but the only noticeable difference between the author of the Yellowplush Papers and the rest of mankind was in his shirt collar. In place of being a single band of linen buttoned on in front, as Americans wear it, his consisted of two sharp pointed pieces of linen coming out of a cravat just below the ears and nearly meeting under the chin. These were tied behind by a linen string, and looked awkward enough, but the seeds of Anglomania were sown in American minds, and from that day to this there has been a constant desire to ape English fashions, especially by the fashionable young men in the larger American cities. It began with the Thackeray collar and has spread across our entire continent without any great amount of benefit being derived therefrom.

Some of these fashions have been rather beneficial in their operations. For instance, when Sir Edward Thornton was appointed British ambassador at Washington he brought his daughters and wife over with him. The wife was a sensible woman and dressed as a sensible woman in England always dresses, so it was not to be wondered at that the fashionable young ladies of the national capital stared in amazement at the heavy walking shoes and serge dresses of the feminine portion of the minister's family, while the young athletic sons of senators and representatives were equally astonished at the heavy brogans and coarse tweed suits worn by the envoy's young men. But the spirit of Anglomania caught up the style and in less than a month the whole city of Washington was endeavoring to copy the Thornton family's costume. In this case the results were beneficial, for the laws of health were subserved by the adoption of thick shoes and warm clothing.

The fashion of parting men's hair in the middle was almost entirely unknown in America up to twenty-five years ago, and its introduction was of slower growth than that of the hobnailed shoes or reefing jacket had been. But the asinine portion of the community, the young men whose fathers had toiled hard that they might in their generation carry gold-headed canes, took up the new fashion and sought to carry it into general usage. However it is not yet necessary to get a lantern to go out and find a real Yankee boy who parts his hair on the side as his father did before him, for the prevalency of British custom fashions is restricted mainly to the larger seaport towns and does not go out into the by-lanes of our earlier civilization.

The latest phase of the disease has manifested itself on Long Island near New York City, where the old English sport of fox hunting has been introduced by Freddy Gebhardt and several other golden calves. We shall hear how Mr Snuffleton Dude was rapidly gaining on the fox when he had to leap a privet hedge and broke his neck, a lovely martyr to the cause of this grand and manly sport. But as bad riders will meet with broken bones and fools die to make places in the world for men of common sense, we suppose we must encourage fox hunting in America. Just how long this British craze is likely to continue we are not well apprised, but we would like to remind some of our golden youth that it is not a penitentiary offense to have been born in the United States.

As a rule the English people who have come among us to enter the ranks of our bread winners are men of plain common sense and level heads. They are capable of discerning the difference between sterling realities and silly shams. And we are badly mistaken if this sensible and level headed class do not find a secret source of amusement in the efforts of our golden youth to ape English fashions. Patriotic men at heart themselves, they will naturally most respect Americans who try to be as American as possible, and for those who would fain be other than what they are the true-bred Englishman will have no sentiment but a true man's contempt. The spirit of modern Anglomania will be apt to find more favor elsewhere than in the eyes of true-born Englishmen.

TIME SERVING DEMOCRATS

The Brooklyn Eagle, one of those democratic papers which speak from conviction and not from expediency, does not see any present hope for the democracy, but it contends that the doctrine of a tariff for revenue only is the true one and that it will be persisted in. The Morrison bill, it declares, only a step in the right direction. If it says upon this question the democratic party has been hypocritical and time-serving, and so contemptible, without principle, or willing to sell its principles for office, the majority of the democratic party making free trade the issue is now determined to be honest in its professions and in its action. The Eagle is doubtless right in its prognostications of the purpose of the majority of the democratic party, but the leaders will probably smother this purpose. They look upon the tariff not as it affects the people, but with an eye singly devoted to presidential strategy. There is no more prominent cause of business depression than excessive taxation. The Financial Chronicle has analyzed the working of the new tax and tariff law for nine months and finds that the decrease in receipts from internal revenue and miscellaneous sources for the current year, estimating the last quarter from the experience of the first three, will be $24 000 000 instead of $34 750 000 as had been expected. But in the past the receipts from these sources have shown a constant increase, the rate being unchanged. Hence for the next year the decrease will be less than $24 000 000, a conclusion which there are special reasons for regarding with confidence. The customs receipts for the three quarters decreased respectively by $7 500,000, $5 250 000 and $3 000 000. That is to say the decrease is itself constantly diminishing, and for the third quarter averaged only $1 000 000 monthly. Even this decrease it appears is not due to the alleged reduction of rates of customs, but to the decline in imports which are subject to tax. To state this differently, the decline in customs receipts for the third quarter was $3 000 000, but the decline in imports was $11 000 000. The conclusion is that the revenue for the next fiscal year will be $362 000 000 and the surplus $120 000 000. But such facts as these, the intrinsic results of the question, are ignored by a large portion of the democracy. This is a great mistake, we think, looking at it from a party point of view. The democrats cannot win this election as bastard republicans, while on their own ground they would have at least a fighting chance. There is no doubt that the doctrine of a tariff for revenue only is the true one for democrats, if not for the whole people.

It is declared by the Sacramento Record Union that in consequence of the unfriendly spirit evinced by the California legislature toward railroad enterprises, work will not be resumed north of Redding on the Oregon extension. That journal berates in a furious manner those who have created the anti-railway sentiment in California. It says that the long looked for and profoundly desired connection with the fruitful north, over a line owned and controlled in the interests of California, will not be realized; that not only the trade of southern Oregon but of northern California will go to Portland; that already the people of Yreka are teaming their freight from the terminus of the Oregon road; that the Central Pacific railroad before this adverse legislation was proposed, was in negotiation with the Oregon company for the purchase of its road to Portland, and that the condition precedent was obtainment of purchasers of the securities for the extension and connection; that Chicago, not San Francisco, will now be the great wholesale market for the north, and that Portland will eventually become the metropolitan center of all this rich region. All Oregon, says the Sacramento paper, which might have been made tributary to the marts of this state, will now face the other way.

THE NEW BANKRUPTCY ACT

Some of the principal provisions of the new bankruptcy bill which passed the senate on the 21st of April are these: The several district courts of the United States and territories are constituted courts of bankruptcy, with right of appeal to the United States circuit courts, with further right of appeal to the supreme court of the United States only upon certificate of disagreement between the circuit judges. Within each judicial district the United States judge may appoint any number of commissioners, not exceeding in any state the number of representatives to which the state is entitled. Such commissioners shall have the powers of a master in chancery and may represent the judge in all things not especially committed to him. The circuit court shall also appoint a supervisor in bankruptcy in each judicial circuit, who shall examine into all bankruptcy proceedings in his circuit, call the attention of the commissioner to lacks and frauds, to matters which would facilitate a speedy and economical settlement, and inform the court for action against [illegible] trustees. He shall make a report to the circuit court in his district [illegible] after inspecting the [illegible] and business of each commissioner [illegible] for that purpose. The compensation of supervisors is $3600 per annum and that of commissioners $2000. The court may allow the latter $10 additional for each case [illegible] but such fees shall not exceed $1 000 per annum. Supervisors and commissioners [illegible] allowed upon their certificates [illegible] sums for disbursement. [illegible] the creditors of the latter [illegible] trustee shall pay 1 per cent of all [illegible] from assets. [illegible] half of 1 per cent on the amount [illegible]. These fees shall be paid into the treasury of the United States.

Every person who owes more than $500 and is unable to pay may apply to be adjudicated a bankrupt, and any person whose debts exceed $1 000 may be adjudged a bankrupt upon the petition of three or more of his creditors whose claims would amount in all to $500, when the debtor leaves his state to avoid his creditors, conceals himself to avoid arrest or service, makes a fraudulent transfer of his property, suspends payment of his commercial paper for thirty days after the same are due and payable, or who makes a fraudulent [illegible]. The bill also allows exemption as follows:

Wearing material for the bankrupt and his family and all other property as may be exempted from attachment by the laws of the United States or any state in which the bankruptcy proceedings are instituted; the court may from the assets allow the bankrupt a sum not to exceed $500 for his support pending the proceedings if his circumstances require it, and reasonable wages for any service rendered the estate at the request of the trustee, and the usual fees when attending as witness.

This bill avoids some of the faults of the national bankruptcy bill last in force, notably in relation to the vicious fee system which permitted the plundering of the estates of bankrupts. The most serious objection to it appears to be the large number of commissioners and supervisors made necessary, but this is unavoidable unless the work is put upon the judges of the national or local courts.

The republican state conventions of Pennsylvania and Illinois have commended the administration of President Arthur as having won the approval, respect, confidence and admiration of the whole country, and the Pennsylvania convention instructed its delegates at large to the Chicago convention to vote for Blaine so long as his name was before the convention, and the Illinois convention instructed its delegates at large to vote for Logan. Other states will doubtless impose other instructions. It is neither unnatural or undesirable that there should be a decided preference of given communities for particular persons, nor is there in the instructions [illegible] anything which prevents an ultimate vote for the man the majority of the convention shall select, or who may be selected by a majority, including the delegates of the said states. The republicans of Oregon should not tie the hands of its delegates by any instructions which will preclude deliberation in the convention and so deprive them of any commanding influence there.

The Fortnightly Review for April contains an article by Mr W J Corbet, M P, on the increase of British insanity, which has a world wide interest. From a critical comparison of official statistics it is clearly shown that within the last twenty years the ratio of the insane to population in England, Ireland and Scotland has steadily and rapidly increased. In 1861 the ratio was 1 81 per 1000; in 1872 it was 2 41 per 1000, and in 1882 it was 2 84 per 1000. The careful comparison of the official returns and [illegible] unmistakably that the extent of insanity in the British islands has increased in these two decades about 60 per cent. Among the causes assigned by Mr Corbet, but very justly mentions the speed at which the world now travels, the continuous mental strain, the worry and racket of life, the anxiety with some to grow rich in a hurry, and with others the struggle for bare subsistence.

According to dispatches from the Washington correspondent of the New York Sun, the charges against General Swaim, judge advocate general, will develop the whole story of the relation of the army paymaster to the downfall of several prominent and otherwise respected officers. The public need not expect any very interesting reading from the report of this board of inquiry, the little pastime according to Schenck being indulged in largely by the military branch of the service, rendering it quite necessary that in this case the board, knowing how it is itself, will return a neatly whitewashed report, which will find shelter along with numerous others in the pigeon holes that compose the cases in the war department.

Theodore Stanton, the editor of a new work about to be published entitled "The Woman Question in Europe," writes that it will show women to be actually voting in England, Iceland, Sweden, Russia and Austria, while in Italy a bill conferring electoral privileges upon them is now pending in parliament, with the chances in favor of its success. An interesting feature of the book will be a letter of somewhat recent date from John Bright, the English statesman, in which he reiterates his opposition to woman suffrage.

And now we learn from the east that no one laughed more heartily at a cartoon of Mr Blaine than did Mr Blaine himself. So long every one else laughed around him it was quite in the nature of the great plumed diplomat to laugh also. No one saw, except his stenographer, however, how the last few chapters of the Reminiscences of Twenty Years were ground out after the ex-senator got into his sanctum, and even then the stenographer didn't catch on. He only saw the effect of the cyclone, but was ignorant as to its cause.

The surplus revenue of the government will be disposed of if congress remains in session long enough. The favorite plan just now is to use it for erecting public buildings. By pooling issues and waiting to accomplish a common purpose, members of both parties succeed in getting their appropriations. "You vote for my bill and I'll vote for yours." "Every man who votes for my bill will get my vote for his," is the way congressmen put it, and the bills go through with neatness and despatch.

It is now placed beyond doubt that gold in considerable quantities is coming out of the Coeur d'Alene mines. Yet the paradox is true that those who don't go to the mines for the gold will get the most of it. So don't all rush at once.

THE LAW'S DELAY

Mr David Dudley Field in a recent address to law students in New York City on the subject of litigation dwelt at length on the delays which prolong a suit for many years and entail heavy expenses on litigants. In New York it takes from five to ten years to get a final judgment in the court of appeals in a suit respecting [illegible] a corporation [illegible]

[illegible]

The report of the civil service commission which has just been published and distributed shows that out of 784 persons examined for positions in the departmental service at Washington only [illegible] were found qualified. Out of 917 examined for the customs service only 60 were appointed. Those who applied for positions in the post office department were a little more successful, as out of 1?1 examined 272 were appointed.

* * *

General Butler expresses the opinion that civil service reform is a mighty small affair. So is a pocket revolver, but when a man gets before the muzzle end of it when it goes off the effects sometimes prove very powerful. That is what some [illegible] Senator Pendleton of Ohio [illegible] have evidently made up his mind not to be hurt that way.

Senator Vance described all the witnesses in the Danville investigation with somewhat lurid and full-glorious eloquence as a hell-fired crowd—an epithet which is more emphatic than discriminating, as only part of the crowd were fired into; the uncertain future will [illegible] the other did the firing.

The question now is, will Blaine and Arthur be strong enough in the Chicago convention to rub each other out and leave the field open to a third? That is the way it looks now, and it at result is just what the republican party needs to assure its harmony and success.

The state republican convention to meet to-morrow probably will not instruct the delegates to be sent to the national convention. It will be judicious not to do so.

ONE INCIDENT RELATED.—The great charm of a reporter's life consists in the endless variety afforded by the unexpected and pleasing incidents which break the monotony of his existence. For instance the fire last night which occurred just before midnight's holy hour was approaching and the weary scribe was just beginning to see his way close to "thirty" on local. How the big bell thrilled the entire staff and how eagerly all rushed down stairs and raced for the lair of the lurid leveler which seemed only a few blocks distant. How, as the gables and spires shone in the glare, they whooped it up and put their best feet forward to be first on the scene. And how their enthusiasm grew less and less as the fire [illegible] an [illegible] famous [illegible] to increase its distance and how by the time the street was reached they had settled down to a walk and when they came to the place where the frogs were croaking in the middle of the street they began to wish there had been no fire and how they [illegible] on through mud and mire and finally reached their [illegible] and were drenched by hosemen and run over by [illegible] and finally went back to the office completely used up and drenched to the skin and disgusted. All this goes to make up one of the charming incidents.

LASPIRATED BIDDING.—"How much am I offered for this trunk? Gimme a bid! The first man that speaks will get a trunk chock full of clothes," yelled an auctioneer at the corner of First and Pine yesterday. The audience was not large and did not appear to be hungering and thirsting for trunks. Several of which, however, seemed battered and dilapidated stood on the edge of the sidewalk. "How much am I offered? Gimme a bid," continued the young man. A fellow in a canvas suit well worn at length bid the princely sum of fifteen cents. The auctioneer stopped a minute to take breath and a fresh hold and after laboring some time to run the bid up to twenty five cents knocked the trunk down to the only bidder. He started in on another trunk and the purchaser dived down into his pocket for coin. After fishing around for some time he brought out a silver [illegible] piece and after [illegible] handed this sum over to the clerk and said it was all he had. The auctioneer [illegible] "Keep the money and hold the trunk [illegible] other five cents." The man [illegible] by a promise to pay the balance. It would seem that old second hand trunks are not in active demand and that those inclined to purchase were not flush with cash.

SHERIDAN'S BABY BROUGHT TO HIM.—There was a baby boy only five days old at the county jail yesterday afternoon. The child was one born to the wife of Thomas Sheridan, the man who is sentenced to two years in the penitentiary for killing William Rose. Mrs. Sheridan came here from California with her husband's father and mother to be present at his trial and a few days after the child was born. Sheridan who will probably be taken to Salem in a day or two had expressed a wish to see his child as soon as possible and it was brought to him by his brother. He took the little thing tenderly in his arms and the father never looked with more affection upon his babe than he did in his felon's cell. The interview was necessarily very brief and as Sheridan kissed his baby good bye tears rolled down his cheeks.

VEGETABLE SHIPMENT DECREASING.—The amount of vegetables received here by the last steamer was much smaller than brought by any steamer for a long time. For some reason there has been great loss on shipments of vegetables of late and the demand has fallen off greatly. The dealers generally complain of a balance on the wrong side of the sheet and as it will not be long till our gardeners will begin to send in supplies it is probable that shipments from California will grow less by degrees till the fruit season opens.

OPENING TO ASHLAND.—Superintendent Brandt of the Oregon and California road goes south this morning to complete arrangements for opening the southern extension to Ashland next Monday. It is understood that the Central Pacific will open about forty miles of its northern extension soon. This will reduce the stage ride to less than 150 miles and the summer schedule overland between Portland and San Francisco ought to be reduced to sixty or sixty two hours.

RELEASED FROM CUSTODY.—A. H. Hart and Wm Reed two of the prisoners brought here from Linn county by a deputy United States marshal upon a charge of passing counterfeit money were yesterday released from custody, it having been clearly shown that they were innocent of any intent to commit crime. The bogus money that they had passed they received from John Davenport, the prisoner who still remains in the county jail.

HOME WITH HIS PRISONER.—United States Marshal E. S. Kearney has received a letter from Deputy United States Marshal Elliott, of Missouri announcing his safe arrival at Kansas City with his prisoner Marias Buchanan, who was arrested at Tillamook. Mr Elliott states that Buchanan gave him no trouble, and that it is his opinion that he never intended to defraud his ward, but he will have to suffer for it.

PIONEERS' DAY.—In answer to inquiry as to the date on which the Pioneers celebration will be held this year, we would state that it has been fixed for June 17. The bylaws of the society fix the date for the annual meetings at June 15 except when this date falls on Sunday in which case the following Tuesday is chosen. June 15 this year falls on Sunday.

INCREASING WHARF ROOM.—The gas company and the Willamette Iron Works have commenced work on enlarging their respective docks between D and F streets so as to bring them out to the established wharf line. The iron works thus gain 25x100 feet and the gas company 15x[illegible] feet. Pile driving has begun under contract to Joe Smith.

SALVAGE CASE CONTINUED.—The case of the Queen of the Pacific has been continued in the United States court until May 28. The witnesses summoned by the libellants have all been examined, but they have a number yet to call and the claimants will not call any until they have heard all on the other side.

OVERLAND PASSENGERS.—Passed Heron yesterday to arrive here at 1 P. M. to-day: H. H. Browning, R. C. Banton, O. L. White, A. H. Anderson, O. G. McCord, May Kimball, Mrs Franklin and N. A. Niles.

PROCLAMATION

To the Hustlers from the West.

You came to Oregon to make money! Of course you did! The chances are good you'll do it but they are no where else so good as at

LA CAMAS

The new manufacturing town, located on the Columbia river fourteen miles east of Portland. There is room for traders in all lines, for manufacturers, speculators, farmers, dairymen and everybody else.

Take notice that this is not a town site boom gotten up on some future railroad or terminus speculation, but the actual development of a splendid water power by moneyed men for the money there is in it and that work has been going on for a year.

To control the water a few thousand acres of farm lands had to be bought. This the water power company does not desire to keep and it is offered for sale in lots to suit. Hundreds of thousands of dollars are to be invested immediately in various manufacturing enterprises to use the water power. A paper mill now being built will employ 150 hands. A saw mill and a grist mill will bring the trade of a large and fine agricultural country. There is room and opportunity to develop a real western town of 10,000 inhabitants in a few years.

This is an advertisement, of course, but if you'll come and see me I will prove to you it's no humbug, and show you a way to make some gold dollars and a home.

Take the steamer Dixie Thompson at the foot of Ash street or the Calliope at the foot of Morrison street, Portland. Fare, $1.

MIDNIGHT FIRE.

Planing Mill Owned by Donald Macleay and Leased by W. B. Cantrell, Entirely Destroyed

About 11:30 last night an alarm was sounded from box 16, occasioned by fire in the planing mill and sash and door factory on north Ninth street near K which with contents was destroyed. The building and machinery were owned by Donald Macleay and the mill was leased to W. B. Cantrell. It was a low one-story frame 75 feet wide and 150 feet deep. No one seemed to know in what part of the building the fire started as the entire premises appeared to be involved when flames were first discovered. There was [illegible] reported by the department but the run was long and the nearest cistern was [illegible] distant, hence nothing could [illegible] done toward saving the building. A dwelling [illegible] occupied by Chas Rivers a short distance [illegible] of the mill was also destroyed, though most of the furniture was saved. The fire [illegible] the whole city and attracted [illegible]

[illegible] Mr Hagen, Mr Warren and Mr Traver were ably represented. There was a [illegible] the play by the introduction of the [illegible] song and dance. While there is nothing objectionable in it as a song it was out of place in the comedy. Such a song cannot be explained. It must be seen. It will be repeated to-night and for the remainder of the week.

THE TIVOLI.—There was a crowded house at the Tivoli theater last evening to witness the first performance of "La Mascotte." The company were all in good spirits and their efforts pleased the audience. There will be a new and very acceptable departure at the Tivoli this week which will hereafter continue. On Wednesday afternoon a special matinee [illegible] for ladies and children, at which no smoking will be allowed.

ALBANY NOTES.

ALBANY, April 28.

Mrs. Joel West is visiting friends in Salem.

Hon. O. N. Denny of Portland is in the city.

J. D. [illegible] has removed to Corvallis where he will reside in the future.

The marshal has posted notices requiring property owners to clean up all alleys.

Dr. [illegible] P. Wallace of [illegible] Tenn. has purchased Dr. T. W. Harris' residence in this city.

On account of the rain the Albany boys did not go to Corvallis last Saturday to play base ball as they intended.

Mrs. W. McConnell has returned from Muncie, Ind., where she has been for several months visiting the scenes of her early childhood.

The Baptist church was crowded to overflowing last evening, the occasion being the dedication of the new building. Rev. J. C. Baker of Salem preached the sermon.

M. Sternberg will occupy the building recently vacated by J. M. [illegible] and M. [illegible] & Seitenbach will move into the corner brick now occupied by Mr. Sternberg.

MR. DEKUM DECLINES.

PORTLAND, Or., April 28.

To the Chairman and Members of the Multnomah Republican County Committee: GENTLEMEN,—I see by the action of the delegates at our county convention that I was honored with the nomination of county commissioner. I regret that I cannot accept. My business prevents me from taking such a responsible position in addition to what I already have. In justice to the tax-payers of this county and myself, I feel it my duty to decline. I thank you for the nomination, and believe I fully appreciate the honor conferred. I am respectfully yours,

FRANK DEKUM.

NEWS OF THE NORTHWEST.

Grass ten miles south and east of Sprague has grown to the hight of ten inches this spring and flowers bedeck the bosom of the prairie.

A petition is being circulated among the people of Sprague praying Judge S. C. Wingard to remit the fine of $500 imposed upon Edgar Lashbrook. None have refused to sign the document. One hundred and sixty seven names were obtained on the petition in the space of several hours. It will be remembered that Lashbrook shot a young man named J. W. Beckton some weeks ago. Beckton was arrested on complaint of Lashbrook charged with the crime of adultery alleged to have been committed with Mrs. Lashbrook. While Beckton was sitting in court, pending the examination, Lashbrook shot him in a moment of rage.

George W. Cable in Sunday School.

Springfield Republican.

The New Orleans novelist can make a good Sunday school address as well as write clever stories of Creole life. Accompanied by Roswell Smith of the Century magazine he spent Sunday with friends in Monson, attended the Congregational church and was invited to talk in the Sunday school in the afternoon. Mr. Cable's fondness for children is proverbial and he accepted. In the course of his remarks he raised his hand, expanded his digits and said: "I have so many children at home. How many is that?" "Five," piped up the youngster promptly. "And half of them are girls," continued the speaker, staggering his audience with his apparently reckless disregard of the truth. "How much is half of five?" asked Mr. Cable. "Two and a half," reproachfully replied a little miss in the front pew. "Yes," said the novelist with a benignant smile as he saw that his reputation for veracity was fast slipping away, "two and a half of them are girls and the other two and a half too—five girls." "Oh," gasped the little miss with a look of relief, and then a ripple of laughter bubbled up from the corner where the "third reader" class sat, floated over the backs of the pews, climbed into the gallery and died away in the organ loft.

PORTLAND'S PARK.

What Nature has Done Toward Beautiful Recreation Grounds.

Portland will ere long have a completed park which it may be proud of and thankful for. There is nothing so grateful to the working man as the city park, where fresh air invigorates, and green fields and rustic scenery rest the eye. There are parks whose broad meadows of well kept grass and artificial mounds and lakes tell of man's ingenuity and represent millions of invested capital, but the more of the natural in wildness and scenery a park contains the more restful and health giving it is. When we go to the country for rest we seek the curved lines of nature, leaving the straight lines of the city behind.

Such a charm has our park. Within fifteen minutes (if a good walker) of the business center one finds [illegible] street [illegible] country as is possible to imagine [illegible] park. [illegible] walks [illegible] the hills [illegible] a view unrivalled in oddity and beauty awaits [illegible].

Just below in the foreground is Portland with its [illegible] homes and residences and well kept gardens [illegible] the middle distance on the eastside of the Willamette are the subdivided farm lands and park [illegible] pine woods [illegible] a giant [illegible] against [illegible] of the mountain [illegible] white crest of snow [illegible] the idea that summer is [illegible]. What could be more restful or [illegible] than such a view. [illegible] within grasp. This is [illegible] side of the park view. Now [illegible] one has travelled as in a dream. It is also [illegible] wild [illegible]. Fir trees as straight as the [illegible] the wildness of the undergrowth would convince one that he is the pioneer here, [illegible] Columbus [illegible].

A large [illegible] workmen are constructing a carriage road [illegible] feet in width which will wind [illegible] the park. At the [illegible] entrance [illegible] gate [illegible] posts [illegible]. When completed this gate will be very [illegible] some. It is about [illegible] feet wide [illegible]. The foot way will [illegible] take the direction of the carriage road [illegible] terrace just at the [illegible] winding paths ending [illegible] places will be completed before the summer [illegible] stated for the benefit of those who are afraid to go on the river for a tete a tete.

The natural springs will be utilized and their waters turned into handsome stone monuments and whatever art can do to assist nature here will be done.

A CORRECTED PARAGRAPH

We reprint the following paragraph from Judge Deady's opinion in the case of Shively vs Nancy Welch et al. [illegible] The words in italics have been dropped out on the occasion of the former publication.

"Leaving out of consideration the fact that neither Shively nor Welch ever had any right to or interest in the land or any right to purchase the same until an [illegible] act of 18[illegible] and that their quit claims [illegible] did not estop either of them from asserting and maintaining as against the other any after acquired estate or interest in them or right to purchase the same from the state ([illegible] Cov. 463; Van Rensselaer v. Kearney 11 How. 322; Fields v. Squires 1 Deady 379; Lownsdale v. Portland 1d. 16[illegible]) it is very clear that Nancy Welch never held the [illegible] nor her husband James Welch but I cannot rest this conclusion upon the argument made in the support by the counsel for the defendants."

FASCINATION OF GOLD HUNTING

The gold hunters of forty-nine are not yet quite all gone. Here and there in the Coeur d'Alene mines one is still found in pursuit of the will-o-the wisp that has lured him for thirty five years. Recently one of them said: "It's the fascination of it. Lord man, when you've struck it pretty rich and can see the gold right in front of yer, when you're piling it up every half hour of the day with a nugget now and again as big as a bullet to cheer you and then when the evenin' comes and you count it up and find a hundred odd dollars just picked out of the earth that day—well there ain't nothin' like it. Then when you don't strike it rich you always think you're goin' to next day, and it's just as exciting hearin' the man tell in the evenin' what they pulled out as it is countin' over your own. Why, I've been three or four months at a time without making a dollar and without a cent in my pocket but gee whittaker the excitement of it don't give a man time to think how hard up he is."

SOMETHING NEW.—[illegible] & Co. are now prepared to furnish their patrons at their refreshment saloon [illegible] chicken pie [illegible] croquettes, chicken [illegible] lobster [illegible] and chicken salads and the usual bill of fare as heretofore.

LINCOLN AND DOUGLAS.

Blaine's Review of the Historical Contest in Illinois.

[From the first volume of Mr. Blaine's Twenty Years of Congress.]

The contest that ensued (on the issue being joined between Douglas and Lincoln) was memorable. Douglas had an herculean task before him. The republican party was strong, young, united, conscious of its power, popular, growing. The democratic party was rent with faction, and the administration was irrevocably opposed to the return of Douglas to the senate. He entered the field, therefore, with a powerful opponent in front, and with defection and betrayal in the rear. He was everywhere known as a debater of singular skill. His mind was fertile in resources. He was master of logic. No man perceived more quickly than he the strength or weakness of an argument, and no one excelled him in the use of sophistry and fallacy. Where he could not elucidate a point to his own advantage he would fatally becloud it for his opponent. In that peculiar style of debate, which, in its intensity, resembles a physical combat, he had no equal. He spoke with extraordinary readiness. There was no halting in his phrase. He used good English, terse, vigorous, pointed. He disregarded the adornments of rhetoric—rarely used a simile. He was utterly destitute of humor, and had slight appreciation of wit. He never cited historical precedents except from the dominion of American politics. Inside that field his knowledge was comprehensive, minute, critical. Beyond it his learning was limited. He was not a reader. His recreations were not in literature. In the whole range of his voluminous speaking it would be difficult to find either poetry or a classical allusion. But he was by nature an orator, and by long practice a debater.

He could lead a crowd almost irresistibly to his own conclusions. He could, if he wished, incite a mob to desperate deeds. He was, in short, an able, audacious, almost unconquerable opponent in public discussions.

CHARACTER OF ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

It would have been impossible to find any man of the same type able to meet him before the public of Illinois. Whoever attempted it would probably have been destroyed in the first encounter. But the man who was chosen to meet him, who challenged him to the combat, was radically different in every phase of character. Scarcely could two men be more unlike in mental and moral constitution than Abraham Lincoln and Stephen A. Douglas. Mr. Lincoln was calm and philosophic. He loved the truth for the truth's sake. He would not argue from a false premise, or be deceived himself or deceive others by a false conclusion. He had pondered deeply on the issues which aroused him to action. He had given anxious thought to the problems of free government and to the destiny of the republic. He had for himself marked out a path of duty and he walked in it fearlessly. His mental processes were slower but more profound than those of Douglas. He did not seek to say merely the thing that was best for the day's debate, but the thing that would stand the test of time and square itself with eternal justice. He wished nothing to appear white unless it was white. His logic was severe and faultless. He did not resort to fallacy, but could detect it in his opponent and expose it with merciless directness. He had an abounding sense of humor, and always employed it in illustrating his argument—never for the mere sake of provoking merriment. In this respect he had the wonderful aptness of Franklin. He often taught a great truth with the felicitous brevity of an Æsop fable. His words did not flow in an impetuous torrent as did those of Douglas, but they were always well chosen, deliberate and conclusive.

Thus fitted for the contest, these men proceeded to a discussion which at the time was so interesting as to enchain the attention of the nation—in its immediate effect so striking as to affect the organization of parties, in its subsequent effect so powerful as to change the fate of millions. Mr. Lincoln had opened his own canvass by a carefully prepared speech in which, after quoting the maxim that a house divided against itself cannot stand, he uttered these weighty words: "I believe this government cannot endure permanently [illegible] slave, half free. I do not expect the union [illegible] dissolved; I do not expect the house to fall, [illegible] I do expect it will cease to be divided. It [illegible] become all one thing or all the other. Either the opponents of slavery will arrest the farther spread of it and place it where the public mind shall rest in the belief that it is in the course of absolute extinction, or its advocates will push forward till it shall become alike lawful in all the states, old as well as new, north as well as south.

COURAGE OF LINCOLN.

Mr. Lincoln had been warned by intimate friends to whom he had communicated the contents of his speech in advance of its delivery that he was treading on dangerous ground, that he would be misrepresented as a disunionist, and that he might fatally damage the republican party by making its existence synonymous with a destruction of the government. But he was persistent. It was borne into his mind that he was announcing a great truth, and that he would be wronging his own conscience, and to the extent of his influence injuring his country, by withholding it, or in any degree qualifying its declaration. If there was a disposition to avoid a true significance of the contest with the south, he would not be a party to it. He believed he could discern the scope and read the destiny of the impending sectional controversy. He was sure he could see far beyond the present and hear the voice of the future. He would not close the book; he would not shut his eyes; he would not stop his ears. He avowed his faith and stood firmly on his creed.

THE AMBITION OF DOUGLAS.

Mr. Douglas naturally, indeed inevitably, made his first and leading speech against these averments of Mr. Lincoln. He then returned to Illinois, after the adjournment of congress, with a disturbed and restless mind. He had one great ambition—to reinstate himself as a leader of the national democracy, and, as incidental and necessary to that end, to carry Illinois against Mr. Lincoln. The issue embodied in Mr. Lincoln's speech afforded him the occasion which he had coveted. His quick eye discerned an opportunity to exclude from the canvass the disagreeable features in his own political career by arraigning Mr. Lincoln as an enemy of the Union and as an advocate of an internecine conflict in which the free states and the slave states should wrestle in deadly encounter. Douglas presented his indictment artfully and with singular force. The two speeches were in all respects characteristic. Each had made a strong presentation of his case, but the superior candor and directness of Mr. Lincoln had made a deep impression on the popular mind.

DYNAMITE AND ARTILLERY.

United Service Magazine.

If dynamite and kindred compounds can be safely used for artillery purposes—and there seem to be no insurmountable obstacles in the way—artillery as at present known will be swept out of existence, and a new system, based upon entirely new principles, will be created. That there is not only a possibility, but a strong probability, that these compounds can be made sufficiently stable for use, at least as bursting agents, is conceded by experts; that they can never be used for projectile purposes, or in projectiles thrown from guns by the explosive force of gunpowder, is immaterial; there are many other ways of projecting bodies to considerable distances than by explosion. The development of cannon during the last thirty years has been truly wonderful. Improvement has followed improvement in such rapid succession that few minds have been able to keep pace with the advance, and none have had time to properly examine the collateral questions connected with the subject. The object in view of all these improvements has been to increase the effective work resident in the projectile at the moment of impact; the resident effective work assumed being the energy of motion, or kinetic energy of the projectile. As this is half the product of the mass into the square of the velocity, the task of inventors has been to increase the value of the factors which enter into it. Consequently, the mass has been increased from the old forty-two-pound size, which was considered a heavy projectile thirty years ago, to the monster weighing a ton, which may well be considered the maximum possible. The other factor, the velocity, has also been increased, and, although the increase has been relatively less, it has nevertheless been considerable; and the product of the two is enormous. The result is undoubtedly satisfactory, so far as power is concerned, but it has been attained at very great cost. Modern cannon of the first class are very expensive machines. They might very properly, like some of their ancestors, be labeled "Ultima ratio regum," for none but kings can afford to own them. And not only are they expensive to buy, but costly to keep and perfectly ruinous to use. If cannon be essential to a military outfit, then war can be waged only by the wealthy, and poverty and oppression are the surest foundations for a throne. If that be true, then human progress has reached its limit and civilization is on the wane. Rather let us rid ourselves of the incubus which perches like a hideous scientific nightmare on the art of war, and find in the adaptation of other less costly forces the means of protecting the liberties of nations and the rights of men.

A western journal announces that Mr. John L. Sullivan, the slugger, has come out for James G. Blaine. If John will only get himself elected from some place as a delegate, the convention would undoubtedly nominate Blaine in at most three rounds.—Boston Post.

A DO-NOTHING PARTY.

New York Times.

The sole hope of the democrats for winning the next election is in republican shortcomings. Of positive merit they have very little. If the republicans would kindly put up a candidate whom a considerable portion of the party would not support, it would be a God-send to the democrats. It is their only chance for success. Of course that chance would be much improved if they should themselves select their strongest man and place him on a platform of respectable stability, but at the moment the question of who that man is, or where he can be found, or even on what sort of a platform he should be placed, occupies very little of the attention of the democrats. They are waiting open-mouthed for the fruit of republican folly to fall down their throats.

This ought to be a cogent reason for republicans to avoid the folly by which the democrats are longing to profit. To those republicans who are attached to their party from principle, and who understand how serious a thing would be the accession of the democracy to power, this reason is a very strong one. It is not mere partisanship that urges them to keep their party up to its highest standard, though of honest partisanship they have no lack; it is a profound conviction that for the government to pass into the hands of the democrats would be a misfortune second only to the misfortune of having the republican party sink to the democratic level.

In point of capacity that level is very low. A single fact will illustrate it. The democratic party has now been in power in the house of representatives for nearly five months, with every inducement to show its ability to promote good government, and what has it done in that direction? Nothing. We do not say that it has not done much, or that it has not done all it ought. It has done nothing. The New York Sun, which is as anxious as any one could be over the distressing situation, says that it is all due to the Morrison bill. But why cannot the party dispose of the Morrison bill? Because it has no convictions on the subject one way or the other, no leaders who can guide it to convictions, no brains or conscience anywhere, in or out of the house, sufficient to furnish it with an intelligible policy on this or any other subject. The Sun itself, which shows signs of singular intelligence in some directions, fails in this one. It can only say, "Take your Morrison bill away, cut down your appropriations, and go home and shout, 'Turn the rascals out!'" But the country, however little it may think of some of the tendencies of the republican party, will not be apt to "turn it out" unless it has some sort of proof that the men who want to get in are better, and of this there is no proof.

It is not merely that the house has done nothing with the tariff bill. It has done nothing with other matters that have been before it. In the question of taxation, for instance, the opponents of Mr. Morrison had an excellent opportunity to serve the country and their party. They did not approve of touching the tariff. They declared that the internal revenue was the thing to be reformed. But they early learned that it was impracticable to abolish the internal revenue, at least they ought to have learned it. If, then, they had had the sense to propose a reasonable revision of the internal tax system and a proper reform of the machinery of collection, they could have carried it in the house, and if the senate rejected it they would have made a strong point for their party. But they did not know enough. There was no one among them with experience and capacity enough to work up such a measure, place it strongly before the house, and carry it by force of argument and persuasion. They could do nothing but cry themselves hoarse over the abolition of the internal revenue. The result is that, after having wasted eight or nine months in barren squabbling, Congress will adjourn leaving not a sign of the capacity of the majority to conduct the government.

It was with no partisan satisfaction that we trace these plain evidences of the rooted imbecility of the democratic party. We regard it as an evil and a nuisance. In common with a great many earnest republicans, we have been working for a dozen years to purify and elevate our own party, and the greatest obstacle we have found has been this hopeless democratic record. It has been the source of strength for the machine politicians, and has prevented them from being frightened into decency. It is the source of their confidence now. But the fact that democratic success would be so severe a blow to the country only renders it the more necessary to strengthen our party to prevent it, for, bad as the democracy is, it will surely beat us with any but our best men.

LITERARY RECOLLECTIONS.

The Cornhill Magazine.

Thackeray told me that the first money he had ever received in literature (under what circumstances he did not say, but they must have been droll ones) was from Mr. G. W. M. Reynolds. For my own part, I may, so far, have been said to have been born with a silver spoon in my mouth, for my literary godfather was no less a person than Leigh Hunt. In the flesh, I regret to say, I never knew him; but as a boy I had an admiration for him that was akin to love. I suppose no writer has ever preached the love of books so eloquently as he has done, or gained more disciples. He had a most kind and gracious nature which was cultivated to extremity. Culture is much more common nowadays than it was in his time; but unless the nature of the soil is gracious, very little comes of such "top dressing." Leigh Hunt combined with the "fine brain" the tenderest of human hearts. His ignorance of business matters and his poverty made him to natures of the baser sort an object of ridicule. Carlyle used to keep three sovereigns in a little packet on his mantlepiece, which he called "Leigh Hunt's sovereigns," because he occasionally lent them to him, and was wont to narrate the circumstances to all whom it did not concern. Hunt would have lent him 3000 sovereigns, had he possessed them, and never disclosed the circumstance. There was nothing in his literary life which Dickens regretted so much as the unintentional wrong he did Leigh Hunt in his portrait of Harold Skimpole. It was true that he drew one side of it from his friend, but the other side—the selfishness and the baseness—had naught to do with him. They were indeed as utterly opposed to his character that it seemed to Dickens that no one could associate them with the original of the picture. Nothing is more common than for a novelist to paint in this way and for the very purpose of the concealment of identity, but in this case the likeness was in some points too striking to escape recognition, and the others were taken for granted, whereat both painter and sitter were cruelly pained.

Can the Bayonet be Supplanted?

London Saturday Review.

As usual, infinite suggestions have been made tending generally to the substitution of something—revolvers, bowies, creeses, kookeries, short Roman swords, and what-not—for the bayonet. The most practical and valid answer proffered has been that it will be time to condemn the bayonet when the private soldier has been properly taught to use it in single combat, which he certainly is not now. That there is no weapon so easily adaptable and so little cumbersome when not in active use as the bayonet is certain, and it is also certain that the need for such use as it came into at Tamaneb does not occur except at the rarest intervals. But it must probably be admitted that any weapon which, like the bayonet, can only be used with two hands, and those wide apart, is at a certain disadvantage in a rough and tumble fight at close quarters, where a great number of men are engaged together. Those who appeal to the feats of the bayonet in skilled hands at assaults of arms forget that in that case there is plenty of space. Still, spears and swords of any length being out of the question for a line-man (who is quite sufficiently burdened and occupied by his rifle) and bowies and all similar weapons having the obvious drawback of want of reach, (unless used navaja fashion, which leaves the user defenseless against a fresh attack) there is probably nothing better than the bayonet. But that instruction in it should be real personal instruction, and not mere bayonet drill, is certain, and probably much might be done to improve its quality as well as that of the regulation sword.

DeQuincey's Peculiarities.

Cornhill Magazine.

The association of common place people and their pointless observations were intolerable to him. They did not bore him in the ordinary sense, but seemed, as it were, to outrage his mind. "To me, to whom the study of human nature in any form had become even then attractive, this was a mere [illegible]. I suppose I showed it in my face, for he proceeded to explain matters. 'Some years ago,' he said, 'I was standing on the pier at Tarbet, on Loch Lomond, waiting for the steamer. A sentimental lady joined me; I felt that she would presently address me, and she did. Pointing to the smoke of the steamer which was making itself seen above the next headland, "There she comes," she said. "Ah, girl, if you and I had seen that fifty years ago, how wonderful we should have thought it!" Now, the same sort of thing,' added my host with a shiver, 'might happen to me any day, and that is why I always avoid a public conveyance.'"

An Infelicitous Illustration.

Boston Advertiser.

The Cleveland Leader uses an infelicitous illustration to show the progress of Mr. Blaine's canvass. It says: "His sudden great popularity is strikingly similar to that of Henry Clay's, who, after having been a presidential candidate for eight years, just as Mr. Blaine has been, he was nominated with a hurrah on the first ballot, by the old whig party, at Baltimore, in May, 1844, just forty years ago." Mr. Clay was nominated with a hurrah, it is true, but with this result: James K. Polk, the democratic nominee, received 170 electoral votes, while Mr. Clay had only 105. Mr. Blaine's friends should be careful of their figures of speech.

TRADE AND COMMERCE.

MONDAY, April 28.

The Oregon brought up a good freight, which is being distributed today. Importations of California fruits and vegetables are quite large with competition brisk. This brings about low prices and small profit to the importer. With the waste and decay the jobber usually clears up small returns on his risk and investment. The number of firms now engaged in this line shows a material increase over last season. With a large local crop the coming season the situation will call for lively work to handle stocks. At present there is a good demand for all coming in, but any addition to this supply by local sources will narrow the importer's field and enliven competition. Fruit is an article that must soon be marketed, and with the fulfillment of present expectations regarding the growing crop, values do not promise well. As far as present information goes the late rains have not materially damaged the budding fruits.

A second steamer is announced as willing to respond to a call—which by the way was supplied last week—to carry freight to Gray's Harbor. After a long effort on the part of a number of our merchants a suitable steamer was taken up for three trips' work. Now a second is to take the route, and there promises to be no lack, for a time, of transportation facilities. It really begins to appear that the demand will be more than supplied and some fear a repetition of the late experience. Portland's share in the coast trade is greatly lessened for the reason that the coast points ship little aside from lumber, and this can not find a market here.

The British bark Pythonus brought from London 2820 bxs tin plate, 5400 bbls cement and 1500 tons grate coal. Recent importations of salt have been large and stocks now held are excessive for the time. Values are not quotably changed as the bulk of importations are in strong hands.

Overland receipts include 20 bbls dried apples, 10 tubs butter, 50 cs lard, 25 cs lye, 2 cs candy, 31 kgs tobacco, 277 kgs nails, 10 qrs 128 hf 100 bbls beer.

PRODUCE RECEIPTS—Past 48 hours: 71 centals wheat, 306 bbls flour, 1398 ctls oats, 416 ctls bran, 60 sks potatoes, 1622 lbs hides, 23 cs eggs, 6 bxs butter. Also 1126 ctls wheat, 516 bbls flour, 51,830 lbs wool, 380 lbs hides from the eastern section.

IMPORTS—Per str Oregon from S. F.: 516 hf 247 bbls 103 sks 3 kgs 280 bxs sugar, 5 cs 6 bbls syrup, 2 bbls 35 cs 285 sks coffee, 74 mats 173 sks rice, 2 bbls 1030 sks salt, 2 kgs 41 cs 4 hfs pickles, 108 pkgs tea, 163 cks beer, 534 cs canned goods, 8 sks rye, 16 cases mustard, 2 cs sardines, 1 bbl 32 bbls meal, 3 cs candles, 2 ctns starch, 278 cs yeast powder, 121 cs axle grease, 307 dns matches, 22 cs 10 kgs sauce, 63 cs extract, 54 cs cream tartar, 154 pkgs spice, 79 cs soda, 6 ½ bbls, 68 cs bak powder, 16 cs sugar lemon, 2 cs wash powder, 325 cs soap, 6 cs candy, 25 sacks nuts, 8 half barrels vinegar, 11 cases fruits, 9 packages raisins, 2 hf cs bacon, 1 cs dates, 2 cs figs, 20 cs paste, 18 cs codfish, 9 ctns chocolate, 70 cs crackers, 1 bbl, 4 sks, 30 bxs dried fruit, 13 cs honey, 29 cs cheese, 20 hf bbls, 87 cs butter, 6 cs limes, 13 cs lemons, 226 bxs oranges, 40 bxs bananas, 4 bls hops, 658 sks barley, 170 sks malt, 228 sks ground barley, 4 bls bags, 4 bls wool bags, 3 bls wheat bags, 142 cls rope, 12 bxs, 247 kgs nails, 57 pkgs tobacco, 46 cs cigars.

FREIGHTS—Vessels are inclined to raise pretensions which shippers are indifferent. There has been an inquiry for some time for a vessel for salmon loading and our San Francisco correspondent states that 45s direct was offered for such a vessel there to proceed to Astoria. Asking rates here for iron are still said to be 43s 9d for orders, but ships are not pressing business. The scattered stocks of wheat in the interior operates against new business, for shippers want a cargo in hand before taking up a vessel. There is now in port, chartered for grain, 4003 registered tons and 5120 disengaged. Of the latter 1977 is wood.

WHEAT—Beerbohm today quotes an advance of a sixpence to one shilling over last Tuesday in red winter and California cargoes. The difference in the latter as nearly due and for prompt shipment has been reduced from a shilling to sixpence, which would indicate that near at hand cargoes are more sought after. Spot markets are strong and the English farmer is marketing an amount almost up to late averages. The French markets have also advanced. New York and Chicago are in improved feeling to-day, as is San Francisco, although the last has not advanced. Our market at present appears to be rather insignificant one, and if shippers are much concerned they do not show it. Millmen are buying small parcels of valley at about $1 47½, but at this figure there is little to be secured. For the past few days receipts of valley have been small.

OATS—Offerings are quite up to requirements, and 40 cents is considered to be the top of the market, although one or two sales of choice are reported at 51 cents. The market shows no new influence and there is no margin for speculation.

POTATOES—As at San Francisco heavy receipts have affected the market, and cars at further depressed by reason of the poor shipping outlet. In a very small way an advance on Saturday's quotation has been possible and in this way only. Dealers do not offer above 50c.

WOOL—The receipt of a few lots of eastern Oregon, mostly from Arlington, is noted. This was consigned to San Francisco firms. Lambing is now pretty much over in the eastern section, and shearing must soon become general. Spot quotations are as yet impossible, and other markets exhibit no change.

DRIED FRUIT—Receipts by steamer were 200 boxes, mostly apricots and peaches. The market is better supplied but values are without change.

BUTTER—Steady. Liberal. California roll, 24@25c; eastern tub, 25@28c.

EGGS—Very few in stock, and those having consignments asked and secured 25c. This price is uncertain.

POULTRY—Values generally steady and without change.

SHIPPING NOTES.

Astoria was down.

The Columbia reached San Francisco at 5:30 A. M., 41½ hours from the bar.

The State of California sailed from San Francisco at 10:15 A. M.

The Idaho came up last night, discharged some general freight and went down to the bunkers to-day to discharge coal.

The Olive S. Southard will finish loading tomorrow, and probably go down river Thursday. She loads full here.

The Sumner R. Mead is at Albina taking in wheat stiffening.

The Norwegian bark Jorsalfarer is at the foot of H street, the Cotesworth and Aberystwith Castle having hauled ahead. She is a neat looking craft and well equipped. Evidently the master is a favorite, for his entire crew remains with him. She will discharge during the week.

The Guion liner Oregon reached Sandy Hook bar the 19th instant, in a run of 6 days, 10 hours and 30 minutes from Queenstown, beating all previous records. During the passage she made over 400 miles each day. The next best record is held by the Alaska, and is 6 days, 21 hours and 40 minutes. This remarkable trip of the Oregon has caused a great stir among transatlantic steamship agents and owners. The Cunard line are building the Etruria and Umbria, which, it is claimed, will excel the Oregon in point of speed. The Anchor line say they will do still better, and the National line will soon have the new steamer America out, which is expected to make the passage in less than six days.

Messrs. W. J. Dutton, representing the underwriters, and Milton Andros, for the ship S. R. Mead, are in the city to investigate and fix damages to the Wellington-Mead collision last February off Columbia river bar. No suit was instituted, but the ship had claim for damages, and the parties interested agreed to arbitration, which is now progressing.

The ship Henry Villard was expected to leave Seattle to-day, in tow of the tug Tacoma, for this city.

The new iron ship T. F. Oakes arrived at Port Townsend to-day, in a passage of 152 days from Philadelphia. She has a cargo of railway supplies for Seattle.

The Clarence S. Bement has sailed from Philadelphia for this port.

Markets by Telegraph.

SAN FRANCISCO MARKETS.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 28.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN THAT DAVID J. Levy, of Portland, Or., did on the 1st day of April, 1884, make a general assignment to me, the undersigned, of all his property, subject to exemption, for the benefit of all his creditors, in accordance with the statute of Oregon, entitled "An act to secure to creditors a just division of the estates of debtors who convey to assignees for the benefit of creditors," approved October 18, 1878. All persons having claims against the said David J. Levy are hereby notified to present the same to me, under oath, at my office, room 12 First National Bank building, Portland, Or., within three months from date hereof.
